You will need pens and sticky notes or note cards.

Have staff members write down a statement about themselves that they believe the other staff members do not know. It may be something like, "I am afraid of dogs." or "I have been to Alaska." Then take up the statements, shuffle them up, read them, and have staff members guess to whom the statement belongs

Mix It Up

People can meet each other through this icebreaker mingling activity.

1. Have each person write down on a piece of paper a question to ask others in the meeting. They can use any question they wish, such as what they did on their last vacation or their favorite book or movie.
2. The goal is to walk around the room, introduce themselves to each person and ask their question.

Or

All Together Now

1. Divide your team into groups of three or four people depending on the number in the team.
2. Have the members in each group talk about themselves, their likes, dislike, and lives for 10 minutes.
3. The goal for each group is to find three things in common to all of the members in the group. It can be anything such as loving to sing, liking the same food, or all having the same favorite movie.

Fact or fiction?

Ask everyone to write on a piece of paper THREE things about themselves which may not be known to the others in the group. Two are true and one is not. Taking turns they read out the three 'facts' about themselves and the rest of the group votes which are true and false. There are always surprises. This simple activity is always fun, and helps the group and leaders get to know more about each other.

Around the world

The leader begins by saying the name of any country, city, river, ocean or mountain that can be found in an atlas. The young person next to him must then say another name that begins with the last letter of the word just given. Each person has a definite time limit (e.g. three seconds) and no names can be repeated. For example - First person: London, Second Person: Niagara Falls, Third Person: Switzerland
